"Gabrielle Thierry: windows on the world"

The coronavirus isolates the planet
Many people live behind their windows
So what if we drew them?
Gabrielle Thierry launched the idea
The artist lives near Paris
She sells her works in France and in the United States

Gabrielle Thierry likes challenges.
In 2010, she settled in at the Orangerie Museum
She paid homage to Claude Monet with paintings that express the musicality of his "Water Lillies".
Gabrielle Thierry stayed there for 18 months.

In March 2020, France went into quarantine like a lot of countries around the world.

*I immediately thought that a window could be a place for expressio.
I realized that it could be interesting to see how individuals might interpret the view from their windows.*

Sketch the world from one's window?

Gabrielle Thierry advanced her idea on social networks . The entire world responded favorably!

*What really surprised me right away was the quality of the drawings.
There were people who didn't think they knew how to draw
In the end, it only required taking a sheet of paper, looking, and drawing...*

During confinement, the window represents the things we are waiting for and our hopes for freedom

dessinetafenetre - #sketchyourwindow is a success
Several hundred participants from 24 countries are involved

They have discovered very many things through this window that we look out of every day

There are many images that one can see translated in a pencil line of hope, of fear, nighttime sketches, sketches sad and lonely, and one also finds hope.

*When you send an image that you see on your telephone on Instagram or Facebook, and then you see the real thing. It's for that reason I really hope that the art museums will reopen.
There are truly many more things to discover in the original image than in a reproduction of it.*

The Fine Arts Museum of Vannes offered to show these works. "Sketch Your Window" continues to welcome sketches from the whole world's windows.

"There is the possible, this window of dreaming open to reality." Victor Hugo
